

Damrosch's "Cyrano" Wins First Night Success

Crowded Metropolitan Opera House Makes a Gala Performance of His Grand Opera in English—Numerous Curtain Calls, Flowers in Profusion and a Speech by the Composer—A Clever Bit of Musical Joiner Work Built Upon a Strong Libretto by W. J. Henderson.

BY SYLVESTER RAWLING.

WALTER DAMROSCH'S long expected opera, "Cyrano," sung in English, got its first public hearing last night at the Metropolitan Opera House before a capacity audience that made the occasion a gala one. Not since the first night of Puccini's "The Girl of the Golden West" has there been shown such enthusiasm. There were curtain calls too many to count after every act, in one of which Mr. Gatti-Casazza was persuaded to appear—a very rare thing. There were innumerable flowers sent up on the stage, some in simple bouquets and others in gorgeous set pieces that drew exclamations of "Ah!" from the women all over the house. Finally, Mr. Damrosch made a speech, and a very good speech it was, too. One could not fail to be reminded of the joyous nights at the Manhattan Opera House when Mr. Hammerstein was king after he had presented a new opera or a new star of the first magnitude.

"Cyrano" is in four acts of five scenes, the book by W. J. Henderson, after the drama by Edmond Rostand. Whatever measure of success it shall achieve will be due largely to the excellence of Mr. Henderson's book, which is not only a fine bit of literature but, from beginning to end, is written in English that is dignified. It is the work of a musician, as well as of an author, and of a critic. And that Mr. Damrosch's opera shall win the favor of the public is more than likely, whatever the learned and judicious may think of it. LITTLE HAS BEEN FORGOTTEN AND MUCH REMEMBERED.

Mr. Damrosch, through his long association with the opera and concert stage, is conversant with the works of most composers. "Cyrano" shows that he has forgotten little and remembered much. In a recent interview Mr. Damrosch was quoted as saying that he was no longer a hidebound adherent of Wagner; but the influence of the Master still affects him. No doubt the assimilation of haunting memories of "The Nibelungen Ring" is unconscious, as is that of strains from the older composers and of the moderns such as Debussy and Puccini. The intermezzo, for which there was a vociferous demand for repetition, to which Mr. Herz would not yield, cannot fail to make one think of the Meditation from Massenet's "Thais," for instance. But if there is little originality or spontaneity about Mr. Damrosch's music, he has put together an admirable piece of joiner work—a bit of musical cabinet-making, as to speak—that is highly to his credit. The orchestration is happy and pleasing, and strong enough without being obtrusive. What the music for the singers lacks is more lyric quality. A few good, plain tunes would be welcome.

One thing, at least, Mr. Damrosch has accomplished: He has effaced the unhappy memories of Mr. Converse's "The Sign of the Cross" and of Prof. Parker's "Mona," and of Lord Howard De Walden's "The Children of Don," which Mr. Hammerstein produced at his London Opera House last spring. More, strongly, I hope I have made it effective with the audience. More of swag, perhaps, would have been acceptable, but it was the poetry and sentiment of which he made the most. In the duel with De Guiche, to his inspired belief, "I touch as I end the refrain," he was excellent; but he was better in the serenade, and he was best in the death scene, a really moving bit of acting that held the audience breathless to the fall of the curtain. His English would have been clearer if he had not been afraid of it. At that, it was an improvement on his exhibition at the dress rehearsal, and it is bound to grow more perfect as he gains confidence. Most of his singing was really beautiful.

Frances Alda has never risen so high artistically as in her Roxanne. She was a lovely vision, in rich gowns and jeweled cloaks and hats, and she sang with beautiful clarity, appealing charm and fine diction. Hers was English as delightful to hear as it was understandable.

A BRIEF REVIEW OF THE MAIN PLOT OF THE STORY.

So many years have passed since Richard Mansfield presented the Rostand drama here and made it familiar to playgoers that a brief word about the principal characters is not out of place. The principal characters are: Cyrano, a poet and soldier, philosopher and patriot, generous, gallant and hero, is cursed with an enormous nose. He is in love with his cousin Roxanne, a beauty and a wit, but fears that his personal disfigurement will make hopeless the task of winning her. After a successful bout at fence with one of her obnoxious admirers, De Guiche, he is about to declare his love to her, when she confides in him that she loves Christian, a new recruit in his Gascony Cadets. Henceforth he devotes himself to helping Christian's suit, prompts him what to say and sing in a serenade of her, gets the poet married, and while off at the war writes Christian's love letters for him every day.

In the end Christian discovers Cyrano's love for Roxanne and that the latter loves him only for the intellect which is Cyrano's, not his. He gets himself killed, and in a battle that follows Cyrano is wounded. In the play, many years elapse before the death of Cyrano in the presence of Roxanne and the disclosure of their mutual love; but in the opera Mr. Henderson brings about the ending only a few hours after the battle.

Mr. Gatti-Casazza has mounted "Cyrano" sumptuously and effectively. The interior of the theatre in the Hotel de Bourgoigne, Rostand's pasty shop, a square in the old Marmais, Paris, and the camp before Arras, and a convent garden, the successive scenes, are richly painted and set. The costumes are rich and tasteful and the bearing of the actors of old time courtliness. These, no doubt, had much to do in arousing the interest of last night's audience, as they will with succeeding audiences, for the opera, probably, will be presented to all the subscribers before the season ends.

AMATO EFFECTIVE AS CYRANO; ALDA A LOVELY ROXANNE.

Amato took Cyrano very seriously. After the third act he was fairly trembling with emotion as he said to me: "I have never been so absorbed in a character. It appeals to me very
